

PRIME MINISTER MacDONALD ACCEPTS MANDATE TO FORM NATIONAL COALITION GOVERNMENT, FOLLOWING RESIGNATION OF LABOR CABINET, TENDERED KING GEORGE

Two-Hour Conference With Crowned Head is Followed by MacDonald's Return to Cabinet Session on Downing Street
—Events Most Dramatic Since Britain's Entry into War

By OTTO D. TOLISCHUR
(International News Service Staff Correspondent)

London, Aug. 24.—Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald tendered the resignation of the Labor Cabinet to King George this morning and accepted a mandate to form a national coalition government.

Premier MacDonald, after passing a sleepless night given over to conferences lasting until the small hours of the morning, went to Buckingham Palace this morning at ten o'clock.

After a two-hour conference with King George he returned to Downing street where the Cabinet was in session. A few minutes later the cabinet disbanded and several ministers coming out of the Prime Minister's official residence said:

"It is all over. We have resigned."

A few minutes later King George sent for MacDonald and asked him to form a National Coalition Government.

Today's events in Whitehall and at Buckingham Palace were the most dramatic since Great Britain's entry into the war in August 1914. They pictured leaders of the British nation dropping pet theories and partisanship to stand behind the bulwark of British credit, till recently considered impregnable as Gibraltar and showed two life-long socialists abandoning the principles of a lifetime.

Both J. Ramsay MacDonald and Chancellor Snowden, when British standing before the world was threatened, risked the hostility of the powerful Trade Union Council, on which their party was founded, by rejecting the advice of eight members of the Labor cabinet and attempting to fill their places with conservatives.

Among the conservatives who immediately indicated their willingness to join the new MacDonald national cabinet were former Premier Stanley Baldwin, leader of the Conservative Party; Sir Austin Chamberlain, former Conservative Foreign Secretary, and Neville Chamberlain, former Minister of Health.

At Downing Street the bare statement was given out:

"A National Government is being formed."

While most of the political leaders of the nation were conferring inside the Prime Minister's residence, Downing Street was packed with a tense and expectant throng that reminded one of war-time London, even of the fateful August day in 1914 when

Alleged Beer Is Found
After Crash On Highway

Collision of two automobiles on the Lincoln Highway near Oxford Valley early yesterday morning led to the discovery of two and a half barrels of beer, abandoned in one of the cars by the motorist, who fled into the woods after the crash. According to Pennsylvania State Highway patrolmen, of Langhorne, the license for the machine, which was responsible for the accident and in which the beer was found, was issued to Fred McCurry, of 6025 Oxford street, Philadelphia. McCurry, police say, will be questioned.

The machine crashed into a car driven by J. H. Butler, of New York City, and then hit a telegraph pole. The driver was seen to leave the car and run into the woods. Mrs. Mary Butler, wife of the driver of the New York car, sustained slight cuts of the face, which were treated at the scene of the accident.

ALL BUSINESS PLACES ARE TO BE CHECKED

All Unregistered Ones Must Give Full Name of the Owners

WILL IMPOSE A FINE

HARRISBURG, Aug. 24.—Every unregistered business place in the state in which the full name of the owner does not appear will be compelled to pay a $6 fee to the state, under plans for a revenue campaign announced here today by Secretary of the Commonwealth Richard J. Beamish.

Beamish has declared his intention of enforcing to the letter the "fictitious names" act, dormant on the statute books since it was passed in 1917. Penalty for violation of the act is a $1000 fine or a year in jail or both at the discretion of the court. The act was passed to prevent concealment of the names of real owners of a business and it is estimated 90 percent of the business places of the state are not registered.

The law, as interpreted by Beamish, who is an attorney, applies to every business. If John Jones conducts a hot dog stand and does not use his full name in connection with the business title, he will be compelled to

NEMURO STARTS ITS CELEBRATION TOO SOON

Whir of Plane Motor Thought
To Be Lindbergh's;
Two Arrive Later

TOKYO EXCITED

By James R. Young
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

TOKYO, Aug. 24.—With the Lindberghs only a few hundred miles away from the capital of the Flowery Kingdom and the suspense caused by their dangerous misadventures over the Kuriles relieved by their safe arrival at Nemuro, excitement ran high in Tokyo today.

They landed at Nemuro at 7:51 a. m. today (5:37 p. m., Sunday, E. D. T.) after a fifty mile flight from Lake Annoro, Kunashiri Island. They left the lake, where they had made their fourth forced landing since their departure from Petropavlovsk, Kamchatka, last Wednesday, at 7:21 a. m. (5:07 p. m. Sunday E. D. T.).

The little city of Nemuro, which has been waiting eagerly to greet the famous Colonel and his wife since they took off from Kamchatka finally touched off its celebration too soon. Members of the crew of a boat in the harbor, hearing the whirr of airplane motors approaching, thought it was the Lindbergh plane, and gave a whistle blast.

Mayor Ando of Nemuro and his councilmen hurried with the population of Nemuro and many outsiders to the waterfront and set fire to the beacons to guide the Americans through the haze.

The arriving plane turned out to be that of a Tokyo newspaper. At the time Colonel Lindbergh was flying blindly over Kunashiri Island trying to find a place to land, trapped again by a Kurile "peasouper" fog.

LATEST NEWS

Philadelphia, Aug. 24.—Residents of nearby seashore resorts and coast towns in Maryland and Delaware today were clearing away wreckage caused by storms that swept the skies over the week-end. High seas at Cape May Point, N. J., left a cottage near the ocean ready to totter into the sea. The cottage is said to be owned by Fred Smith, of Brooklyn, who neighbors said occupied it until a short time ago. At Easton, Maryland, residents said the storm, which began on Wednesday, was the worst ever experienced in that section.

Harrisburg, Aug. 24.—Flag-bedecked Harrisburg today played host to hundreds of delegates and visitors to the Silver Jubilee Convention of the Pennsylvania Elks' Association. The crowds were expected to reach record proportions by Wednesday and Thursday, red letter days of the convention. Formal opening exercises of the convention are scheduled for tonight when former Governor John K. Tinner of Charleroi delivers an address at the Meade D. Detweiler monument.

THE TIMES

The present generation has been branded as immoral; but a less superficial survey will reveal the fact, rather, that it is increasingly critical. "We are living in lax times." "Our country is on the way to perdition." "A wave of immorality has swept over us." These are expressions rife at the present time in all parts of the United States.

The plays which are drawing the largest crowds on Broadway, it is true, may contain problems heretofore considered too intimate for discussion. The jokes in other successful productions may strike harshly upon sensitive ears. The books of the day may dwell too liberally upon the principles of life. Even the young people, who have not had the advantage of their elders' restrictive training and censored reading, are the targets for much indignant criticism. They are not modest; they have no reserve!

But a true critic should be also a close student of history. Have those who made these judgments studied similar conditions in other periods? The original reading of Shakespeare's plays has no rival among the most suggestive plays of today. Life appeared to have little value set upon it, let alone rules regarding the conduct of that life. The crude lack of restraining laws relative to the personal safety of women set another seal upon the degeneracy of the old times. If men are opening their eyes wide today, it is surely true that their vision is growing correspondingly clearer and more discriminating.

PREVENTABLE DEATHS

Medical science for decades concentrated its knowledge and efforts upon diseases which ravaged humanity in other days and was so successful that scourges and plagues no longer menace humanity in civilized countries. Epidemic and virulent outbreaks have been checked in nearly every quarter of the globe.

Science has saved millions from early death from infectious and contagious disease, but thousands of these lives have been prolonged only to be snuffed out later in life by heart disease. Heart disease has become the cause of more deaths than any other single ailment.

Medical statistics show that deaths from heart troubles reduce the average span of life by more than one half and that 2,000,000 persons in the United States suffer from them sufficiently to have it interfere with their work, play and comfort.

The encouraging phase of these disclosures is that in the majority of cases disorders of the heart are preventable. Excessive use of stimulants, focal infections, improper habits of living and improper care of the body are the chief preventable causes.

An educational campaign can materially reduce the death rate from heart disease. Public recognition of the facts and universal knowledge of a few simple rules would keep millions of hearts beating many years longer.

The greatest danger from heart weakness lies in the fact that they seldom give the warning given by many other less dangerous ills.

GRAHAM

THE MYSTERY OF GERALDINE

by ANTHONY ABBOT

COPYRIGHT BY GOWRIE, FRIEDLE, INC. — DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

On Christmas Eve young and pretty Geraldine Foster disappeared from the office of Dr. Humphrey Maskell, where she was employed. Mrs. Morgan, Maskell's neighbor, corroborates his statement that he distributed gifts with her daughter that afternoon. Geraldine had broken her engagement with Harry Armstrong. It is also learned that the mysterious Ephraim Foster, who had written Geraldine, is a woman. A black-mail note, presumably written by the missing girl, leads Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt to a deserted house on Peddler's Road. Outside a window, he finds seven dead, blood-stained pigeons. The interior of the house is topsy-turvy. Colt comes upon a bloody axe and a strand of blond hair. The body of a nude woman, her head covered with a pillow case, is found buried a short distance away.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE Commissioner gently brushed the dirt and hardened blood from the face and scrutinized it intently. Was this the body of Geraldine Foster? The resemblance to the photograph was undeniable.

"The body is nude," cried Thatcher Colt suddenly, "and yet—"

He put his finger on one cruel wound in the right shoulder. Very carefully he disengaged a tenuous piece of thread, imbedded deeply in the flesh.

"There are these almost invisible traces of cloth in several of the axe-outs," he called back over his shoulder. "Evidently she was fully clothed when she was attacked, and stripped after she was dead. Now why was that?"

The Commissioner, still on his knees, next became interested in the pillow case. He held the case close to him, playing the rays of the spotlight on it.

"The pillow case is wet," he said aloud, "but not with blood."

For a moment he muttered grimly to himself, and finally said distinctly:

The Scent of Pine.

"And this is dry ground. Very dry ground. We have had a prolonged dry spell. What is water doing in this grave? And the smell of pine trees all around? There are no pine trees growing nearby."

He reached in, fumbling about in the earth that lay under the stiff form. He put one hand on the knee and then on the shoulder, and drew it away with a low murmur of wonder.

"The body, too, is wet," he muttered.

Suddenly, he rose, turned to me and said, briskly:

"Tony, I want you to stay here and guard the body. McMahon, come with me."

I watched the two figures retreat through the trees and I stood there, alone, with the wind muttering in the dry branches, and the open grave with its dreadful burden exposed at my feet. It was full dark now and I will confess that I was very cold and lonely.

The Commissioner had taken the pillow case with him. What could he mean by all those mysterious comments? Why had a pillow case been put over the head of the corpse, leaving all the rest of the tortured body nude? Did this betray a weakness in the killer? I wondered if the explanation was that he could not bear to look upon the mutilated face of his victim.

"Ah, no, Tony," I was later to hear Thatcher Colt assure me. "The pillow case was not weakness—it was strength. It was used deliberately and with diabolical intent."

Through the trees I could see the glimmer of lights in the little house where Geraldine Foster had met her death. Here she lay, in the earth beside me, and I marvelled again at the irrevocableness of death. In this dead girl's head, I reflected, there was still a brain and on that brain was left the full impression of the crime and the killer. Yet science knows no way of reading the secrets of a brain that is dead. If it were only possible to extract that brain in a laboratory, subject it to tests and, finding the memory records, interpret them, translate them, get full access to them—

Ah, then, I thought, if that were so, the first thing the smart criminals would do would be to cut out the brains of their victims and destroy them.

A Lonely Vigil.

Such were my ghoulish and fantastic musings, as I stood guard beside the body of the murdered Geraldine Foster.

Suddenly I stopped and listened. Not far away I had heard the rustle of footsteps; and a light gleamed fitfully through the trees. "Who is there?" I called.

"It is me," said Neil McMahon, and a moment later the Commissioner's chauffeur covered me in the glare of his hand-torch. With some astonishment, I observed that he was carrying a small bottle in his right hand.

"What is that for?" I asked.

Without replying, he passed me his flashlight and then dropped into the trenchyous shadows that hovered over the open grave. Lying flat on his stomach, Neil uncorked his bottle and lowered it out of sight. I heard a gurgling sound and then saw him lift the bottle, half-filled with some fluid, and carefully cork it. You can see that bottle, too, exhibited today in the Department's Crime Museum.

As Neil stood up, I was about to repeat my question, when a sudden interruption prevented me. So absorbed had I been in his operations that I had not noticed the approach of others, and now to my astonishment I saw Thatcher Colt approaching with Betty Canfield walking by his side. She threw a glance of horror and apprehension but she did not speak.

"Just take one look and tell me," said Thatcher Colt, and he put his arm around the girl as they stood together on the brink of the grave. At the sight of the dead body, no loud cry came from Betty, but the low moan of anguish that rose from her lips was as poignant and pitiful as it was conclusive.

"It is Geraldine!" she wailed, and the next moment Thatcher Colt was leading her, almost dragging her away from the grave, with Neil hastening after them. Cruel, but a necessary performance.

For more than half an hour after that, I kept my lonely vigil over the body of Geraldine Foster. Meanwhile I could guess a part, at least, of what was afoot in the house. Neil McMahon, acting on the orders of his chief, had telephoned Headquarters. Already the word had gone forth through the various channels of the gruesome fact that Geraldine Foster, the Bureau of Criminal Information the news had been flashed, and to all others concerned. Even now detectives were on their way to us from the Borough Homicide Squad, with their police photographers and stenographers; the Medical Examiner or one of his assistants had been summoned and with him would certainly appear the Inspector commanding the Detective Division in the locality where the body lay, and probably the Captain of the Precinct, as well. And some one from the District Attorney's office was headed for us, too, with a detective assigned to aid him.

All this machinery of the law was set in motion by Thatcher Colt's telephone call to Assistant Chief Inspector (now Commissioner) Edward P. Mulrooney. Meanwhile, as he awaited the coming battalions, I knew that Thatcher Colt returned to his solitary quest, carefully noting all the existing conditions, the signs of the struggle, the weapon—the hunter was already started on a private trail which was eventually to lead him into incredible discoveries.

Though it was only half an hour, it seemed to me that I had stood guard for hours before I saw, far down through the trees, the flashing of lights and heard the rumble of many voices. Thatcher Colt strode forward, leading a procession of officials, patrolmen, plainclothes men and others from the Department. In a few moments, a dozen pocket electric lamps were blazing like toy comets around the grave. The place was transformed from a desolate spot to something like a camp, full of important activities. Thatcher Colt, in personal command, had ordered the entire plateau of undeveloped land roped off, so that possible footprints and other traces—later found to be non-existent—might be safeguarded against tramping feet. In the group that stood around the Police Commissioner was David Gallop, from the District Attorney's office, Inspector Cretser, from the Detective Division, Doctor Multooler, an Assistant Medical Examiner, a group of plainclothes men, and a number of patrolmen. A photographer from the Department was setting up his camera and focusing, and soon blast after blast of lighted smoke flashed up in acrid plumes through the trees as the flashlight pictures were taken from various angles of the body. The photographer then left us, to take pictures of the wreckage within the house.

Amazing News.

Under Colt's orders, some of the detectives began a meticulous search of the surrounding land, not waiting until dawn but prowling with flashlights in organized sections. Still others were delegated to repeat the Commissioner's search of the house. Meanwhile, two patrolmen were hoisting the body from the grave. They carried it back to the house and heaved it up on a white enameled table in the kitchen. There at the request of Thatcher Colt, the Assistant Medical Examiner agreed to make a preliminary examination.

"How long do you think she has been dead?" asked Thatcher Colt, after we had waited in silence for perhaps five minutes.

Doctor Multooler looked around over his shoulder and replied: "I can only guess now. I make an autopsy. But I should say not more than thirty-six hours."

Thatcher Colt's face expressed the deepest amazement.

"Thirty-six hours!" he repeated. "That seems impossible!"

CROYDON STILL WINS AND ANNEXES 28TH

Croydon travelled to N and Segley avenue, Philadelphia, and chalked up the 28th win by taking over Klady A. C., 5-4.

Ralph Stromp, a Bristol high school boy, tried his shots at Klady and had them at his mercy, having struck out 11 batters.

W. Fenders doubled in the first and scored on Heftman's single, scoring the first run.

Walt Jones scored the second run when he hit a home run over the street in left field.

Klady scored four runs in the third inning, two were unearned due to an illegal decision by the umpire. Sherlock's double sent in two runs.

Croydon scored the final runs in the eighth. W. Fenders doubled, Heftman singled, Moran singled and sent in two, and Wal Forest singled and sent the winning marker across for Croydon.

Prime Minister MacDonald To Form Coalition Gov't

Great Britain entered the war against Germany.

A similar crowd surrounded Buckingham Palace, where the King studied his country's problems in surroundings strangely different from those to which he is accustomed. Buckingham Palace has been closed for the period of the King and Queen's vacation at Balmoral, Scotland, the furniture had been draped with dust covers, the blinds drawn and the servants sent away.

Ladders stood here and there where workmen were engaged in redecorating and repainting.
The Labor party headed by Premier MacDonald won the election of May 30, 1929, and on June 4 Stanley Baldwin, Conservative leader, resigned. Mr. MacDonald was immediately commissioned to form a government.

Members of his original Cabinet were: Chancellor of the Exchequer, Philip Snowden, who occupied the post in the first Labor Government in 1924.

Foreign Secretary, Arthur Henderson, who, in point of continuous serv-

NEXT, Washington entered upon what he had now begun to ardently hope for—a long succession of pleasant and peaceful years as a master farmer. He had made one attempt before, now it was to be final. He set his hand to the task of broadening his acres, to the enlargement and improvement of Mount Vernon, and to increasing the productivity of his farms.

THIS was one of Washington's docks, built for the handling of grain, tobacco, flour and other products, which he shipped in his own sloop to points on the Potomac. "Buy nothing you can make within yourselves" was his motto. He made plows, directed his blacksmiths, wood burners, shoemakers, weavers and in a season seined from the river close to one hundred thousand herring, marketing about eighty-five thousand of the catch.

ice in the House of Commons, was its oldest Labor member.

Secretary for India, Wodgewood Benn, who at that time was a recent recruit to Labor ranks. He formerly had been a Liberal.

Secretary for the Dominions, Sydney Webb, who was president of the Board of Trade in the first Labor Ministry, and author of a number of books on socialism.

Lord Privy Seal and Deputy Leader of the House, J. H. Thomas, who was Secretary for the Dominions and Colonies in the first Labor Government.

Lord President of the Council, Lord Parmour, who occupied that same post in the first Labor Government.

Home Secretary, J. R. Clynes, who was Lord Privy Seal and Deputy Leader of the House in the first Labor regime.

pay the $6 registration fee, under Beamish's interpretation of the law. Such names as "Union Garage," "Bon Ton Millinery," or "Blue Pig Cafeteria," the secretary of the commonwealth cited as examples of violations of the law if they are not registered.

No arrests will be made for violation of the law, Beamish announced, until after October 1 of this year, although it will be revived. No effort has ever been made to enforce the act on any other basis than that of preventing real owners from obviously attempting to conceal the identity of the true operators and owners of a business.

The Fathers' Association orchestra, R. Joseph Martini, director, begins second year starting next Tuesday evening, September 1st, at 8 p. m., Wood street school building auditorium, Wood and Mulberry streets. Members of the orchestra will please report on time for practice.

Mooseheart Band At Philadelphia for Concerts

the forty-third annual convention of the Loyal Order of Moose. On their return to Mooseheart the band will give a concert at Pittsburgh and also at Meyerstown.

Twelve other members of the band are also from Pennsylvania, giving this state the largest number. Illinois with ten members is second and Ohio is third with five. From far off Alaska come two members—a boy and a girl. The Mooseheart Band won third place in Class B at the national high school band contest at Tulsa, Okla., in the spring.

Mr. Howard is starting his third year as director of the band. Before coming to Mooseheart he was director of the band department of the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, O., and in addition to this work there he obtained an A. B. degree. Mr. Howard has a large class in clarinet and other wind instruments at the Chicago Conservatory of Music.

Remaining in Reamstown until he completed his high school work Mr. Howard then went to Ithaca Conservatory of Music, at Ithaca, N. Y. During his stay here Mr. Howard won six full scholarships on the merit of his work. He later became a member of Patrick Conway's Band, with which organization he was connected for six years, the last two as clarinet soloist. He is a member of the Phi Mu Alpha, national musical fraternity; Phi Kappa Tau, national social fraternity, and Phi Kappa Lambda, national honorary musical fraternity.

For the personnel of his Mooseheart Band Mr. Howard has 1,300 children to draw from. The class of 101 graduates last June was the largest since Mooseheart was founded in 1913 by Senator James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania, who resigned recently as Secretary of Labor, after serving in the cabinets of three Presidents. The cornerstone was laid by Vice-President Thomas R. Marshall. Fifteen Pennsylvania students were members of this large class. The class next year will have twenty-five graduates from the great commonwealth of Pennsylvania. For a good many years Mooseheart has had a concert band that made occasional trans-continental trips during which they played to very large audiences.

Musicians who have attained a very high standing in the profession have praised Mr. Howard and his work with the band very highly. Last spring, when Ernest S. Williams, dean of the Ithaca, N. Y., Band and Orchestra School, went to Mooseheart to act as guest conductor for the annual concert, he was most lavish in his praise of their work. Mr. Williams said he had known Mr. Howard for a long time and for that reason he expected to hear a passably good band.

"but," said Mr. Williams after the concert, "I was not prepared for the well-rounded organization that you have here. Every department is most efficient. Your solo clarinetists have tones that would be worthy of men occupying the best positions in very large musical organizations. The care that Mr. Howard has taken in the development of the woodwinds shows great thought and planning. Section after section has been developed and his instrumentation is quite satisfying. All the way through the members of the band show careful training. Mooseheart steps right out among any of the bands we have in New York State."

So pleased was Mr. Williams with the vocational training that members of the band had received in their regular school work that three members of the 1931 graduating class at Mooseheart have been at the Ithaca school where a special arrangement was made for them to help defray their expenses by making concrete lampposts, bird baths, and benches, such as adorn the campus at Mooseheart. They are joining the band for the Atlantic City concerts.

Every child at Mooseheart has a chance to study music if he has any
